LAW Career Course Institutions in India and Abroad

Ours is a country where disparities in social and economic opportunities amongst the population are quite pronounced. So a degree in Law not only provides decent opportunities for livelihood but also proves to be a tool to flight against injustice of all kinds prevalent in the country. Unlike in the past, when Law graduates had only two options of either becoming a judge or a practicing lawyer, options open to them today are huge and varied. Add to that the prestige attached to the profession since long, you have a very attractive vocation to pursue.

Law is the set of enforced rules under which a society is governed. Law is one of the most basic social institutions-and one of the most necessary. No society could exist if all people did just as they pleased, without regard for the rights of others. Nor could a society exist if its members did not recognize that they also have certain obligations towards toward one another. The Law thus establishes the rules that define a person's rights and obligations. The law also sets penalties for people who violate these rules, and it states how government shall enforce the rules and penalties. In most societies, various government bodies, especially police agencies and courts, see that laws are obeyed. Because a person can be penalized for disobeying the Law, most people agree that laws should be just. Justice is a moral standard that applies to all human conduct. The laws enforced by government have usually had a strong moral element, and so justice has generally been one of the Law's guiding principles. But governments can, and sometimes do, enforce laws that many people believe to be unjust. If this belief becomes widespread, people may lose respect for the Law itself provides ways to amend or abolish unjust laws.

The legal profession is not just about lawyers engaged in histrionics in courtrooms to present their cases dramatically before the honorable judges. Law is the cement of the society and an essential medium of social change. A lawyer must respond to client's needs. Understanding of the society is a must as there is a strong correlation between the society and the Law.

Lawyers must possess excellent communication and presentation skills, as they have to cross-examine witness to establish facts before the court. The skills related to counseling and drafting are absolutely viral for a successful lawyer. Further, a high level of integrity will go a long way in making you a big lawyer because you have access to distinctly personal information about your clients.

Law Courses

The courses offered in Law are:

- Bachelor of Laws (LL.B.)
- Master of Laws (LL.M.)
- Integrated Program in Bachelor of Laws (BA LL.B.)
- Master of Civil Law (MCL)
- Doctorate in law (Ph.D. degree)

LL.B. course is of three years duration while LL.M. and MCL are of two years duration. BA LLB is of five years duration, taken after 10+2.

These types of courses are available with most of the universities. In both the cases (BA LL.B and LL.B) the students have to appear for an entrance test and personal interview. People interested in higher degree and specialization can further pursue Master of Law (LL.M), Master of Civil Law (MCL) or a Ph.D. degree, DCL, etc. Some institutes also offer one-year postgraduate diploma course in various areas of Law. Those who are not interested in practicing in a court of law but at the same time are curious to know about the various facets, can go for two-year correspondence course for Bachelor of General Law (BGL) or Bachelor of Academic Law (BAL) after graduation.

Of the specializations, a criminal lawyer is concerned with matters like loot, arson, rape, murder, etc. A civil lawyer on the other hand is concerned with the right of an individual and also draws up wills, executes lease deeds, and appears before the court in mortgage cases. In certain situations, they also act as custodian or the trustee of an estate. In addition to the two most popular areas—civil and criminal, lawyers also provide a gamut of services in the fields of business and company law, taxation, constitutional law, real estate, labour, family laws, patents, excise, consumer and environment laws. With the advent of the MNCs due to globalisation and mergers and acquisitions becoming the norms of the day, disciplines like corporate law, international trade, arbitration and investment and intellectual property rights have become quite popular. Increasing use of internet and e-commerce replacing conventional business has made the information technology highly lucrative and an emerging field for lawyers. Further, most companies employing company secretaries prefer law graduates. This combination may take one to the highest rungs of business organizations. For those with a degree in law combined with a degree or diploma in personnel management and industrial relations, the sky is the limit.

Qualifications for Law Course

One needs to be 10+2 in any discipline for BA LL.B course and graduate in any discipline for LL.B. To apply for LL.M. one needs to be a Law graduate (LL.B or B LL.B).

Admission Procedure for Law Course

In most of the Law schools around the country admission of students is done either through entrance exams or on the basis of school / college results. Most of the top law colleges in the country select students through an entrance exam. If you are looking for admission to a 5-year programme at a top law school, then you should be prepared to give entrance exams. If the admission process requires an entrance exam, then as a basic eligibility criterion, a minimum of 50% in the board exams is usually a must for all colleges. The Interviews and Group Discussions, if any, are usually formalities, and everything turns on the entrance exam.

The Law entrance exams usually test students in the following areas:

- Legal Reasoning
- Logical Reasoning
- Maths Class IX and X level - occasionally a couple of Plus 2 topics)
- English
- General Knowledge

Internship

After acquisition of a Law degree, the graduates have to undergo training with a senior lawyer. As an apprentice, you learn about the practical realities of this profession. All the Law graduates who enroll themselves with the Bar Council of India are entitled to practice in a court of law.

Usually internships are for a period of about four to eight weeks, wherein students learn crucial skills such as drafting of pleadings, agreements and contracts, client interviewing, court-craft, legal research, advocacy, etc. These internships or placements as they are commonly referred to are a platform for the students to apply the theoretical inputs acquired through classroom and library learning in a practical framework and in turn, acquire skills from real life situations.

This cyclic process is also extremely beneficial for the individuals or agencies with whom such internships are undertaken, since the work that the interns do (which is most often of a very high quality) directly contributes to their output. Therefore, interns are a value-addition, albeit for a brief period, to their chamber, firm or organization, as the case may be. Internships also help foster relations between the students and the agencies that they work with during their law school tenure, which in many cases has blossomed in the long run into a mutually rewarding employer-employee relationship. Unlike the usually brief recruitment process where neither the student nor the recruiter gets an adequate opportunity to know the other well enough, employment relations which have materialized through internships are often more meaningful because both parties are well versed with each other's potentials and strengths.

Interns also serve as excellent ambassadors for the institutions they represent, there by furthering the growing reputation of five-year residential law schools in India. Lawyers, recruiters and the like gauge the institutions that the interns hail from by the skill and acumen exhibited by the students during their internship. Thus, even the law schools are keen on enhancing the internship programmes for their students.

Prospects

Prospects for Law graduates are tremendous. The avenues in which they can work are diversified in nature. Lawyers can become Corporate Counsellors overlooking the working of companies in legal matters. They can work with law firms, be in private practise or work for NGOs (Non Governmental Organizations) and social service agencies.

Law graduates can be employed in Government services. Recruitment to the State Judicial Services is made through competitive examinations conducted by State Public Service Commissions. The eligibility qualification is a Law degree. Successful candidates are appointed as Sub-judge or Munsif and may rise to become Chief Judicial Magistrate,

District and Sessions Judge to even High Court Judge, depending upon their career record and seniority. After practising as a lawyer for a specified number of years, you can also be appointed directly as Additional District and Sessions Judge. Law graduates also find job opportunities as Public Prosecutor, Solicitor, Deputy / Additional Advocate General or Advocate Generals.

At the lower levels State governments hold examinations to recruit Public Prosecutors / District Attorneys. Further, they may find employment with various departments of Central / State governments. Public Sector Undertakings (PSUs) need several Law Officers, Legal Assistants and Managers (Legal services). Graduates with specialization in labour laws are preferred in such cases. For handling legal matters and Court Martials, etc. Law graduates are required by Judge Advocate General (JAG) Branch of Army Headquarters. Here, you will be selected as commissioned officers in the regular ranks through the Services Selection Board (SSB). In addition, Law graduates find employment with business houses, local authorities and even the Ministry of Law, where legal officers are required for in-house legal services.

- Karnataka proposes common CET from next year

With a view to save students from the hardship of facing two entrance tests for seeking admission to professional courses, Karnataka government is considering to conduct a common examination for government, aided and private professional colleges next year.

The government would hold parleys early next month with private college managements which conduct a separate Common Entrance Test (CET) under its banner Consortium of Medical, Engineering and Dental Colleges of Karnataka (COMED-K), Minister for Higher Education, D H Shanakara Murthy, told reporters here.

The students have to attend the CET conducted by the state for admission to government and aided colleges and also that of the COMED-K, which has more professional colleges under its umbrella.

The government intends to decentralise conduct of CET exam by holding it at divisional and district headquarters, Murthy said, adding, the existing period of three months involved in conducting CET exam will be reduced to 45 days.

At least 8,000 engineering seats have remained vacant this year. (Source The Hindu)

- Karnataka Entrance Examination Authority (KEEA) to replace Karnataka CET Cell

The Karnataka Government is planning to disband the Karnataka CET Cell year and set up Karnataka Entrance Examination Authority (KEEA). The newly set up KEEA will conduct entrance exams from next year for all courses Medical, Engineering (earlier conducted by KCET Cell) and polytechnic, MBA/MCA, nursing, and other postgraduate medical/dental courses conducted by RGUHS.

The existing CET Cell conducts seat-selection process only for undergraduate medical/dental/engineering courses and lateral entry scheme for diploma holders. Once the Authority is in place, students seeking admission to engineering and medical courses need not appear for multiple entrance tests. Even other universities, agencies and government departments can outsource the entrance exams and seat-selection process to the Authority.

The Authority will conduct a common entrance test for all seats in professional colleges. Depending on the seat-sharing ratio between the private colleges and the state government, separate counseling will be held. (Source TOI Aug.8, 2006)
