1. INTRODUCTION

From the days of Industrialization, safety in operation of an industry is the prime consideration in location, design, layout, construction, and maintenance. The constant striving for more production, more powerful and efficient machines, more automation involved, and more complex work schedule has resulted in providing not only better customer satisfaction but also for increased safety while in production.

Traditionally, both academicians and practitioners have intended to address risk by focusing on technical aspects and looking for the immediate causes of accidents or fire incidents after they have taken place. In this context, training program on several aspects of safety management is highly important, useful, and necessary for all levels of an organization.

Keeping this in mind a joint venture between JU and CII has been planned for personnel from various sectors, such as construction, production, electrical, and office and home.
